

Valentine's Day

The perfect Valentine's Day gift isn't one that's bought it is one you make from the heart... page 2

Who's Snooki?

Find out which RSC student does not know who Snooki is? Check out the Spotlight to find out... Page 3

15TH Street News

Friday, February 11, 2011

Black history month examines past, present and future trials of an influential culture

By: Brittany McDaniel
Feature Editor

In honor of Black History month, the RSC Black History Committee sponsored the African-American History Celebration Tuesday, Feb. 8, in the Main Dining Room.

Monique Bruner, professor of political science, emceed the event, introducing the Millwood Arts Academy third grade dance group, whom performed a variety of tributes to trail-blazing African Americans including Marcus Gravey, Malcom-X, and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

The Millwood dancers quoted poetry from Langston Hughes and performed the Black Pledge of Allegiance for attendees.

James Hochtritt spoke on the influences of African-American and Black culture, describing his speech as "food for thought" rather than an actual lecture. "At various times in colonial American, more Africans were arriving there than Europeans. As a result of that, just the cultural impact that Black Americans had on this country far exceeds the historical population numbers."

He described the hypocrisy in a struggle for a nation based on equality that viewed its darker skinned citizens as less than worthy of equal rights. "The fact that people were enslaved, and the fact that colonial America was built upon the backs of the slave men, women and children forced people to take a long hard look at themselves in the mirror and ask themselves if they were in a sense being human in their treatment of [African Americans]," Hochtritt said.

Hochtritt pointed out that even after the Civil War, the entire nation reverted back to a place where the color of one's skin required separate and unequal treatment. "How did a nation collectively go to bed for 100 years and think this was perfectly acceptable? People got increasingly aggressive and asked the country 'Are you living up to that credo?' The collective response was, 'No you are not, get it right.'"

According to Hochtritt, while there has been much change, a truly equal society has not yet been achieved, an invisible discrimination still plagues society today. He described it as a form of discrimination that is less obvious and that you quite put your finger on, but you know it's there."

The election of the nation's first Black president was used as a point of evidence that the nation is moving towards a more socially progressive country. "You have to stand back and appreciate the symbolic importance of that election. It doesn't make everything perfect, but symbolically we have taken a step in the right direction," Hochtritt said.

After hearing the guest speaker, Bruner challenged the audience to become a part or something bigger, just as she challenges her government classes. "What are you doing to be part of the solution, to really say you have made a difference?" Bruner asked.

After the presentations Bruner announced the winner of the D2L Black History quiz. Bruner announced that 500 people had taken the quiz and that 24 made a perfect score of 100 percent, who were then eligible to win a Kindle and protective case. Antonio Ochoa was announced as the drawing winner, but he was not present to accept the prize.

Professor James Hochtritt speaking to students during Black History Month assembly Tuesday Feb. 8, 2011. The assembly preached against racist. (Photo by Chasitie Martain)

"The fact that people were enslaved, and the fact that colonial America was built upon the backs of the slave men, women and children forced people to take a long hard look at themselves in the mirror and ask themselves if they were in a sense being human in their treatment of [African Americans]."

- James Hochtritt

Professor Monique Bruner speaks to students and faculty during the Black History Month assembly held on Tuesday, Feb. 8, 2011. During the assembly, a Kindle was given away as a prize. (Photo by Chasitie Martain)

African-American inventions

- Super Soaker water gun
- Wooden pocket watch
- Microphone
- Boat and train automatic lubricator
- Morgan traffic signal
- Peanut butter
- Wrench
- Shoe production machine
- Gong and Signal chair
- Removing cataract lenses
- Dry cleaning process "dry scouring"
- Fountain pen
- Mixing machine (food)
- Folding beds
- Ironing board
- Artificial heart pacemaker control unit
- Fire safe
- Cell phone
- Air conditioning unit
- Clothes dryer
- Door knob
- Elevator
- Gas mask
- Guitar
- Tricycle
- Typewriter
- Coin changer
- Radiation detector
- Shoe
- Curtain rod
- Toilet
- Lawn mower
- Stethoscope
- Rolling pin
- Ice cream scoop
- Ironing board
- Lantern
- Spark plugs
- Stove
- Printing press
- Home security system
- Corn planter
- Cotton planter
- Disposable syringe

Virtual face-life of rose.edu asks for student, faculty participation in order for more growth, effectiveness

By: Brian Trude
Assistant Editor

The RSC website, www.rose.edu, is scheduled to undergo a major facelift.

The Office of Marketing and Public Relations, with the help of design firm Element Fusions of OKC, will be debuting a new, more interactive version of the school's website by the end of February 2011.

"We started looking at replacing the current site in the summer of 2010," John Cain, director of marketing and public relations, said. "Since that time, we have evaluated a vendor to help provide the structure and content management system, and we are now in the process of finishing out the design."

The new site, which features a more streamlined and simplified layout, will also feature an increased multimedia function, including student-submitted video.

"[RSC] is trying to make the content a little more dynamic and relevant to the students than what is going on currently [on the site]," Ken Beachler, official RSC photographer, said.

"We would love to have students create videos that we could post on the website," Cain said. "Of course, they would have to be subject to approval, but we want students to be able to submit videos about their experiences at RSC."

According to Cain, faculty and staff will benefit from the site's Content Management System, or CMS. The CMS, Cain says, will allow clubs and teachers to easily update content on the site without the need to know coding or go through the Office of Information Technology.

Cain believes that the CMS "will make it easier for non-technical people to keep the site current."

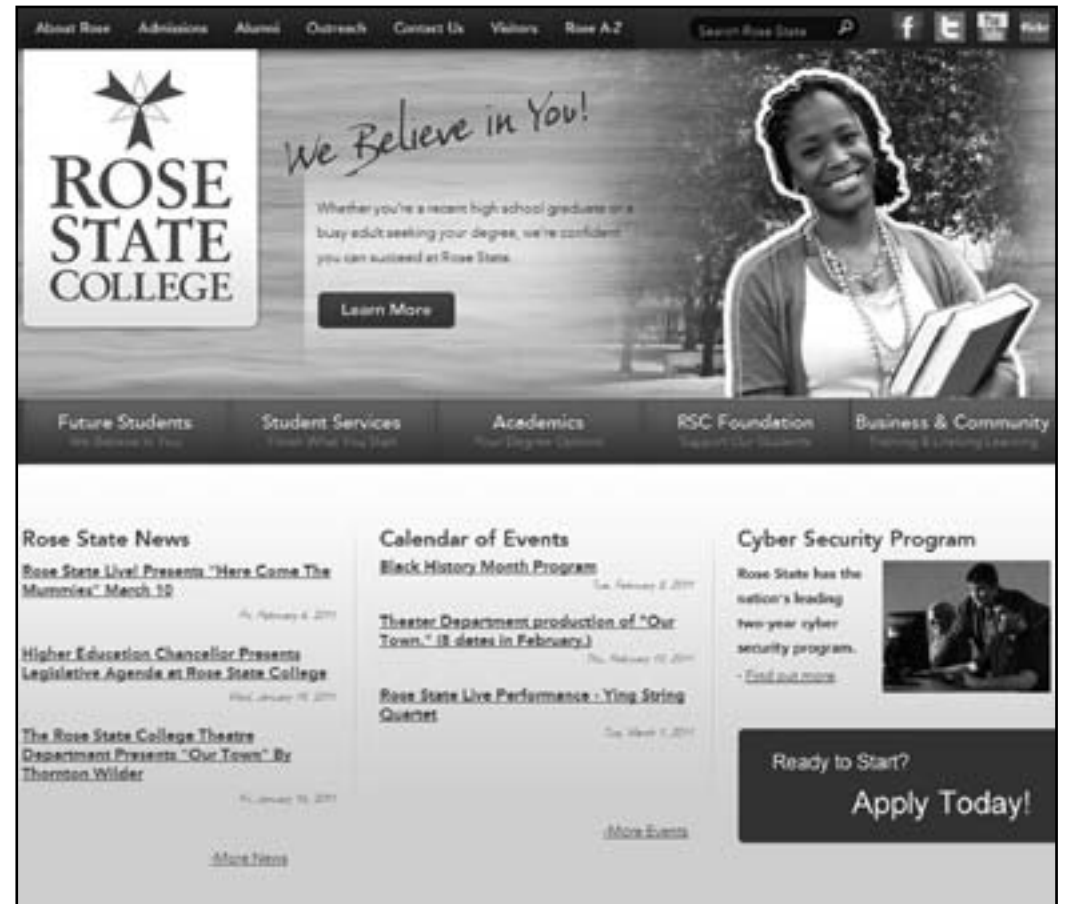

"With more and more people looking to a website as a principle means of getting information, it is important that RSC have a more robust web presence," Cain said.

The new website will replace the current rose.edu website. The address will remain the same.

Students or faculty interested in submitting video for the new website should contact relations, at 733-7962, or by e-mail at Ben Fenwick, news coordinator of public

bfenwick@rose.edu

"WITH MORE AND MORE PEOPLE LOOKING TO A WEBSITE AS A PRINCIPLE MEANS OF GETTING INFORMATION, IT IS IMPORTANT THAT RSC HAVE A MORE ROBUST WEB PRESENCE."

-JOHN CAIN

Ready to Start?
Apply Today!

EDITORIAL Chicken combo please, hold the hate

Being situated squarely in the Bible Belt, RSC and the surrounding community is not often exposed to religious controversy. What would be considered controversial elsewhere often draws little more than a second mention in our neck of the woods. Chick-fil-A, the fast-food restaurant chain ubiquitous with cows whom have poor spelling, recently made a donation of food to the Pennsylvania Family Institute, one of the latest of several food donations to groups with anti-lebian, gay, bisexual and transvestite (LGBT) stances and agendas. Other groups sponsored by Chick-fil-A include the Citizens for Community Values, the Family Research Council and Focus on the Family.

Pro-LGBT groups and universities have reacted negatively to this latest donation to a gay-bashing organization, with the University of Indiana – South Bend going so far as to suspend Chick-fil-A operations on their campus. Chick-fil-A has never made any attempt to hide the part of Christian beliefs that plays in their business practice, so it should really come as no surprise that the company supports other Christian-centric groups through donations. So, the question is, is it appropriate to punish a company financially because of their philanthropic decisions? The University of Indiana's decision to suspend the company's operations is a bit of a black eye on Chick-fil-A's efforts to expand out of the South. With over 1,500 locations, Chick-fil-A has been spending the past decade moving the brand beyond its Deep South comfort locations. RSC also regularly receives catering from Chick-fil-A for school events, and is usually a popular draw amongst students and faculty. Should the fact that Chick-fil-A actively supports groups built around intolerance, hatred and bigotry change the school's relationship with the company? The college's already has a background with allowing different groups to practice what they preach on the campus. The newest club on campus, Spectrum Alliance, supports members who are, or know, people in an LGBT background, while the veteran club Baptist Collegiate Ministry brings their religion to others interested. These two conflicting ideologies haven't been questioned or turned against here at Rose.

In the end, as with any restaurant chain, the thing that matters most is what comes on that tray when someone orders food. So if supporting gay-bashers is your thing, then please, enjoy that chicken sandwich.

Music Stand: Originality best for love and shallow pockets

By: Miranda Liming
Editor-in-Chief

Did you all watch the Super Bowl this year, my dear readers? Wait, don't tell me, cause I'm not interested. I refuse to write about the Super Bowl, the Half-Time Show, or the atrocities the NFL lovingly calls the Green Bay Packers and the Pittsburgh Steelers. You may be asking yourself, "Oh great and wondrous Miranda, why would you not watch the Super Bowl?" I have two reasons: one, hockey is a way better sport than any pansy football league; and two, I'm a born-and-raised Philadelphia Eagles fan. If they don't play, I don't watch.

Now, I understand that this season is the most expensive of all. Between Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's Eve, and then Valentine's Day, if you're pockets are desert dry by now, give me a call. For those of you who are dating or married, it's hard to think up new and inspiring gifts for a holiday that was started because of a beheading (see page four). Di a m o n d s ? Too expensive. Chocolate? Not if you want to be accused of ruining a diet. Flowers? If you buy too cheap she'll laugh; too expensive you can't afford. So what are we supposed to do? Mix tape. That's correct, I said it. For those of you who remember what cassette tapes are, congratulations, you're a step ahead in the game. Remember the feeling you had when you made a mix tape? The painstaking process of pushing the record and play button simultaneously while hoping you depressed them in time to catch the whole song. Then giving them to someone after you spent hours in your room recording, deciding, decorating, and then re-recording. It was a pure, natural, perfect way to show someone how you felt. Why tell them yourself when you can hand over a fantastic piece of technology and let Pat Benatar or The Smiths reveal the undying love for you. This is your challenge dear reader: make a gift this year, and make it count. Don't buy flowers, candy, or a stupid stuffed bear. Don't buy anything. Make your special someone something by hand that showcases their interests, not your bank account. By doing this they will be thrilled and actually cherish your gift, and you'll be happy that you looked thoughtful and loving, not like a cheap skate. (Photo illustration by Danielle Finnegan)

Campus Chat: What is the best or worst pick-up line that you have ever heard?

Adriana Valtinson
Contributing Writer

Chastie Martain
Photographer

Audrey Goins, pre-pharmacy
"Are you from Nashville, because you're the only 10 I see."

Aasiyah Ivy, psychology and sociology major
"Baby, can I be in your religion?"

Chris Arms, pre-med major
I cried a tear drop in the ocean for you, and the day I find it is the day I'll stop caring."

"My name is Sumer, so 'Can I be your fall.' That's pretty corny." Summer Fields, nursing major.

Calamities of Nature by Tony Piro

The 15th Street NEWS
Story Ideas/Questions: 733-7401
Fax: 733-7931
Web site: <http://www.rose.edu/comm/friend/15street/index.asp>
Facebook: 15th Streets News/Mass Comm
Mail: 6420 SE 15th Street, Midwest City, OK, 73110

Editor in Chief
Miranda Liming (mliming@rose.edu)

Assistant Editor
Bryan Trude

Features Editor
Bryan Mangieri

News Editor
Brittany McDaniel

Graphic Artist
Danielle Finnegan

Circulation Manager
Jacob Sudarth

Tech Support
Scottie Seger

Letters to the Editor
The 15th Street News welcomes and encourages letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 300 words and may be edited for clarity, length, or to avoid obscenity, libel and invasion of privacy but ideas will not be altered. Submissions must include the author's name, ID number, and title. Anonymous letters will be read, but not printed. Letters may be hand delivered to 6410; sent by mail, or e-mailed to the secretary, (mliming@rose.edu).

Policies
The 15th Street News is a designated public forum. Student editors have the authority to make all content decisions without censorship or advance approval. Columns, commentaries and letters to the editor are personal opinions of the writers and do not necessarily reflect the views of 15th Street News or other students, faculty or administrators of the college. The editorial staff writes editorials. Publication of all materials is at the discretion of the editor. Anyone having a complaint may call the editor in chief, (733-7400), or the Student Publications Board chairperson, Dr. Kent Ladley, (733-7400).

15th Street News, a student newspaper serving the RSC community, is published weekly, except school holidays, on Fridays during the fall and spring semesters by the Office of Student Publications, 6420 SE 15, Midwest City, OK 73110. 15th Street News is a member of Oklahoma Collegiate Press Association, which has designated this paper top junior college newspaper six years, and Associated Collegiate Press, which has rated it All American 30 semesters. This publication is printed by Edmond Sun, Inc., issued by RSC and authorized by the Coordinator of Student Publications. Cost to the student newspapers is $301.81 for 4,000 copies per issue and $56.40 for spot color. This paper is recyclable.

Donuts for Sale!
The RSC Cheer Club will be selling donuts Monday through Thursday mornings during February to raise money for in-state competitions. Representatives will be outside the Social Sciences and Science and Math buildings, weather permitting. Doughnuts can be purchased by the dozen, or for $.75 each.

Your Name in Lights!
RSC is going to give four contest winners space on an electronic billboard to post a photo and a (pre-approved) message of their choice! The Name in Lights contest will be for anyone who has already "liked" or decides to "like" the college's Facebook page between Jan. 10 and Feb. 15. A random drawing will choose winners. Two winners will be shown on electronic boards on Heifer Parkway and two winners will be shown on a regular board at 25rd and Hiwassee. Jenan El-Bakoush can answer questions at 733-7960 or jelbakoush@answ.edu.

Party Hearty Zumbathon
Saturday, Feb. 26 at the RSC Wellness Center. Participants are asked for a $15 registration fee. Door prizes and a light lunch will be provided. Check in starts at 9:45 a.m., and the class begins at 10 a.m. lasting until 2 p.m. Call 733-7392 to enroll.

Wear Red Day
By donating $5 and receiving your "Every Beat Counts" t-shirt ($10 for baby doll and long sleeve t-shirts) you can help the AHA raise women's awareness of cardiovascular disease. Your participation will also entitle you to wear jeans and "Every Beat Counts" t-shirt to work at RSC on February 23, 2011. Purchase your t-shirts at the lobby desk in the Wellness Center.

Calling all books!
The Library Club is looking for donations for their annual Love-a-Book book sale, Feb. 14 and 15. Proceeds from the sale go to support Library Club activities, including food for the needy and the purchasing of new books for the LRC. All book donations are welcomed, including hard backed and paperback books. Hours for donation are 7:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays; 7:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. on Fridays; 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Saturdays; and 1 p.m. until 8 p.m. Sundays.

News and Features Spotlight: Lisa Doane

By: Timothy Miranda
Contributing Writer

Lisa Doane, human resources major, is all too familiar with the perpetual balancing act that work, school and home lives place on returning adult students. Doane shares her home life with her wife, Leah, in a relationship she describes passionately as, "just love." Between the two of them, they have three kids: 22-year-old Greg, 14-year-old Wesley, and 7-year-old Hailey. Adding the kids to a 40-hour work week, and having to dedicate time toward her classes, it's not hard to see why she has no time to think about Snooki's latest antics. TM: What does it feel like to be a parent? LD: Yea, it has a lot of ups and down. I mean you go through [a lot of] "he doesn't like me" or "she doesn't like me." [Parenting] makes you grow up. TM: What was the turning point that you realized that you needed, or wanted to go back to school? LD: At first I realized I wanted to come to school because I wanted to start my own business. Small businesses are failing everyday; maybe I should change my degree. So I changed it to human resources because this way I can still help people. TM: Are you from Midwest City? LD: No, I'm not. I'm actually from Sterling, Illinois. After Hailey was born I moved down here. TM: What motivated that move? LD: Actually it's funny, I looked at the map and I spun it around, pointed my finger down and it pointed to Oklahoma City. TM: What if it had landed in Greece? LD: We might have to spin again. I wanted to be in the United States. I'm so glad that finger pointed on Oklahoma. There's a lot more to do here. TM: Did you come from a small town then? LD: Yes. You know you had all these small

Lisa and Leah Doane enjoying an afternoon together. (Photo provided)

Annual leadership event introduces, builds new campus relationships

By: Brian Trude
Assistant Editor

Student senators and club leaders met together for the annual spring retreat, Jan. 28, at the Professional Development and Training Center.

"Good morning everybody," Dr. Jeanie Webb, vice president of student affairs, said as she welcomed the attendees. "Are you ready for some fun?" The retreat, held during the beginning of spring and fall semesters, is to introduce senators and club leaders to each other, and to promote teamwork between the two groups. "[Campus leadership] is like RSC. This is a team," Webb said. "None of us will be successful without the others." Attendees took part in team-building exercises building towers from dried pasta noodles and marshmallows, as well as brainstorming event ideas for a possible third day of Springfest.

Speaking at the event was Julie Lesko-Bishop, coordinator of student publications. Lesko-Bishop spoke to the attendees about the role of the press and how it can be used for their benefit. "We are here to connect and inform the students about what you do," Lesko-Bishop said. "But for us to do that, you need to toot your own horn and let us know." "Today, and when you leave here, I want you all to think: our word is team," Webb said. "We are all equals."

Four seats, Six eligible, Two absent

By: Miranda Liming
Editor-in-Chief

Senate endured a busy day Tues., Feb. 8, trying to plan catch-up, like the majority of campus, during their weekly meeting.

Because of the Jan. 31 storm, Senate was forced to postpone the election of new officers. The organization looked to elect a permanent Vice President and four senator seats. Senator Jeremy Tanequodde replaced Standing Vice President Josh Dan as the newest Vice President of Senate.

Senate also had six applicants vying for the open senate seats available. Applicants were Robbie Barthel, former senate member; Shawn McCreary, former Senate President; Joe SanNicolas, liberal studies major and member of President's Leadership; Tahita Jackson, Dijoun Newman and Alisha Wood, all three of whom were absent during the presentation and election process.

After quick deliberation, senate approved, and voted in, Joe SanNicolas, Dijoun Newman, Alisha Wood and Robbie Barthel as the newest senators of the 2010 – 2011 session. After investigating the Student Senate Bylaws and Constitution, an applicant does not have to be present, or provide information on their qualifications for a position to become elected by a voting body. In other senate news, Treasurer Myka Sederis reported a balance of $23,902.65 in the senate account. Zarick Long was appointed as the new DMA of the Health Sciences division, by the executive board.

The Senate and the Financial Review Committee granted the RSC Cheer Club $500 for club activities and necessities during Tuesday's meeting. Because of the impending, and previous, storms to hit the Midwest City area, Senate made the decision to table legislation to be presented until the Feb. 15 meeting.

The students portraying Nazis spent a day as a privileged class, sitting in front rows, serving as teachers' pets and being told they were smart. Meanwhile, the students who portrayed Jews ate in silence in the hallways, sat on the floor in the backs of classrooms and wore stars pinned to their shirts, said Karen Shull, the 6th-grade English teacher who created the simulation. Such simulations are performed in schools across the country as a way of teaching that prejudice can be casual and easy to adopt. While Hammond's program is highly structured and appears to generate little criticism, education experts say similar simulations have gotten out of hand and been harmful to students. They urge schools to proceed with caution when planning them.

The simulation has brought some Hammond students to tears as they grow frustrated with their second-class status, Shull said. After spending Wednesday in their assigned roles, the students switched places Thursday, allowing everyone a chance to experience both sides of the history lesson, Shull said. "The students in their first group were pretty downtrodden," she said. "Then their talk changed. It's very interesting to see how quickly they switch roles. I've had several say, 'I'm so glad I'm German today.'" Students kept journals about their roles and how they felt. All 68 students were assigned an essay chronicling their reactions to the simulation. And, a Holocaust survivor and author from New York was coming to speak to middle and upper school students. The whole experience coincided with Holocaust Remembrance Day on Jan. 27 and was designed around the book "Daniel's Story" by Carol Matas, Shull said. These forms of academic simulations are fairly common, but education experts warn they must be designed and monitored with caution. The danger comes when students become too aggressive or students who already have emotional problems feel bullied, said Nathan Carnes, an associate professor at the University of South Carolina's College of Education. "Middle school can be an awkward period of time," Carnes said. "One must be careful and very scrupulous about these learning experiences. On the other hand, what we know in education is the highest form of learning for students is through experience."

The Holocaust simulation has been part of the 6th grade curriculum for four years at Hammond, a private school in Columbia, S.C., where the annual middle school tuition is $13,720. Parents receive an information paper about the program and sign a permission slip for their children to participate, Shull said. So far, no one has opted out, although a few parents have expressed concerns about it. Educational simulations came to life in 1967 when Jane Elliott, an Iowa elementary school teacher, created the famous blue-eyed/brown-eyed experiment in which students were separated based on eye color and one set was told its members were more intelligent. She discovered that the blue-eyed children who were told they were special began acting as if they were superior to the roles and how they felt. All 68 students were assigned an essay chronicling their reactions to the simulation. And, a Holocaust survivor and author from New York was coming to speak to middle and upper school students. The whole experience coincided with Holocaust Remembrance Day on Jan. 27 and was designed around the book "Daniel's Story" by Carol Matas, Shull said. These forms of academic simulations are fairly common, but education experts warn they must be designed and monitored with caution. The danger comes when students become too aggressive or students who already have emotional problems feel bullied, said Nathan Carnes, an associate professor at the University of South Carolina's College of Education. "Middle school can be an awkward period of time," Carnes said. "One must be careful and very scrupulous about these learning experiences. On the other hand, what we know in education is the highest form of learning for students is through experience."

"A lot of educators are wary of this kind of immersion because it's not really authentic," Costello said. "And if you're not careful, you can do a lot of damage." Costello said she was not familiar with Hammond's program. After listening to a description of it, Costello said it sounded "well thought out." She encourages schools that use similar immersion programs to take time to incorporate modern discrimination examples, such as today's U.S. attitudes toward Muslims and Hispanics or even girls' sports. "Are they equipped to recognize some of today's injustices?" she said. "Tie it to contemporary issues." Riley, who now teaches 8th grade geography at Hammond, said the school broadens the lesson by looking at discrimination on a global scale, such as genocide in Darfur. And the teachers use it to teach basic, school-day thoughtfulness such as including others at a lunch table. "It opens the door for conversations later for the cool girl who has always been treated like a queen and now she's had a day where she's been mistreated and had to walk a mile in someone else's shoes," she said. (c) 2011, The State (Columbia, S.C.). Visit the State at <http://www.thestate.com/>. Distributed by McClatchy-Tribune Information Services.

roles and how they felt. All 68 students were assigned an essay chronicling their reactions to the simulation. And, a Holocaust survivor and author from New York was coming to speak to middle and upper school students. The whole experience coincided with Holocaust Remembrance Day on Jan. 27 and was designed around the book "Daniel's Story" by Carol Matas, Shull said. These forms of academic simulations are fairly common, but education experts warn they must be designed and monitored with caution. The danger comes when students become too aggressive or students who already have emotional problems feel bullied, said Nathan Carnes, an associate professor at the University of South Carolina's College of Education. "Middle school can be an awkward period of time," Carnes said. "One must be careful and very scrupulous about these learning experiences. On the other hand, what we know in education is the highest form of learning for students is through experience."

Briefly Speaking

has already "liked" or decides to "like" the college's Facebook page between Jan. 10 and Feb. 15. A random drawing will choose winners. Two winners will be shown on electronic boards on Heifer Parkway and two winners will be shown on a regular board at 25rd and Hiwassee. Jenan El-Bakoush can answer questions at 733-7960 or jelbakoush@answ.edu.

Party Hearty Zumbathon
Saturday, Feb. 26 at the RSC Wellness Center. Participants are asked for a $15 registration fee. Door prizes and a light lunch will be provided. Check in starts at 9:45 a.m., and the class begins at 10 a.m. lasting until 2 p.m. Call 733-7392 to enroll.

Wear Red Day
By donating $5 and receiving your "Every Beat Counts" t-shirt ($10 for baby doll and long sleeve t-shirts) you can help the AHA raise women's awareness of cardiovascular disease. Your participation will also entitle you to wear jeans and "Every Beat Counts" t-shirt to work at RSC on February 23, 2011. Purchase your t-shirts at the lobby desk in the Wellness Center.

Calling all books!
The Library Club is looking for donations for their annual Love-a-Book book sale, Feb. 14 and 15. Proceeds from the sale go to support Library Club activities, including food for the needy and the purchasing of new books for the LRC. All book donations are welcomed, including hard backed and paperback books. Hours for donation are 7:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays; 7:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. on Fridays; 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Saturdays; and 1 p.m. until 8 p.m. Sundays.

Entertainment

Page 4
February 11, 2011

"7 words" in one place leaves columnists reminiscent

By: Bryan Trude
Assistant Editor

Do you know what they don't talk about anymore?

George Carlin.

Ok, so I couldn't quote the exact line, at least not without flooding the office with angry letters and spend a very nice visit with my boss behind a closed door.

Despite his death in 2008 from heart failure, Carlin remains the grandfather of black humor stand-up comedy with liberal tendencies, giving rise to figures such as Bill Mahar and Lewis Black.

Much to my delight a large number of HBO Specials released over Carlin's five-decade career in radio and comedy is now available for streaming.

Twelve specials, including "Doin' It Again," "You Are All Diseased" and his final special, "It's Bad For Ya," represent segments of Carlin's career from the late 1970s to the modern day.

Carlin, often remembered for his foul mouth and somewhat crass outlook on society in general, is also known for keying the infamous seven words you can't say on television, which I will not repeat for that rule also applies to print.

Carlin's sour view on events and people around him, which hilarious in their own right, also provide a unique insight into issues and concerns that are still relevant today, more than two years after his death.

In fact, some of today's most popular and influential entertainers, including Chris Rock, Jon Stewart, Jerry Seinfeld, Bill Cosby and Kevin Smith, all cite Carlin as an influence in their careers and personal lives.

And now you can see why, straight from the source.

However, I would suggest against repeating anything heard in these titles during work or class times. Those seven words are banned by the FCC and many other organizations for a good reason.

Last weeks puzzles solved

GRAB	LEAH	EPCOT
RELO	OPRY	GOUDA
OLAN	VICE	BORAX
WINE	DECAN	TER
TYIDOL	AIRLINE
HES	RING	STORED
	BIFOLD	SOWS
PLACE	BOEFFE	ECT
VEAL	SAVOIR
PALLID	STONE	RUS
STAINED	DREAMT
	SHOWER	NOZZLE
ADD	ELIE	ROAN
PANIC	ESOS	ARUT
TRACK	BEYS	SSTS

6	5	4	1	8	3	9	7	2
3	2	1	7	9	4	8	6	5
7	9	8	5	6	2	3	4	1
1	4	6	8	3	5	7	2	9
5	3	9	2	7	6	1	8	4
8	7	2	9	4	1	5	3	6
9	6	3	4	5	8	2	1	7
4	1	5	3	2	7	6	9	8
2	8	7	6	1	9	4	5	3

Crossword

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11
12			13	14	15				16
17					18				19
20				21					22
23				24			25
26			27	28	29		30	31		32
		33			34		35		36
	37	38					39
40					41
42			43		44		45		46	47	48
49		50			51	52				53
54				55			56	57	58
59				60			61
62				63			64
65				66						67

- Across
- 1 Ricky Martin's "Livin' La Vida ___"
 - 5 Start of many addresses
 - 9 Lawyers' org.
 - 12 Schools for Jules
 - 15 Prefix with sol
 - 16 Heater
 - 17 On the line
 - 18 *If absolutely necessary
 - 20 *Ranger, for one
 - 22 "It's the real thing" soft drink
 - 23 Govt. watchdog
 - 24 Not just my
 - 25 Current pioneer
 - 26 Quandary
 - 30 One who raised Cain
 - 32 Sea salt?
 - 33 Spare tire site?
 - 35 Refuse to budge
 - 37 *"Am I missing something here?"
 - 40 Blacks out
 - 41 Coeur d'__
 - 42 Many a CBer's workplace
 - 43 Brit. recording giant
 - 45 "CHiPs" star
 - 49 Kind of alcohol
 - 51 Little john?
 - 53 Lady's man

- Down
- 1 Flipped (through)
 - 2 Eight-footers?
 - 3 Capture
 - 4 "Put ___ on it!"
 - 5 Three-line verse
 - 6 Professor's goal
 - 7 Capture
 - 8 Appear unexpectedly, with "up"
 - 9 Religious doubter
 - 10 Political repercussions
 - 11 Deep down
 - 13 Sixth sense, for short
 - 14 Schuss, e.g.
 - 19 Diamonds, to hoods
 - 21 Oregon highlight

- 25 Letter?
- 27 McGregor of "The Men Who Stare at Goats"
 - 28 Hot Wheels maker
 - 29 Midler's "Divine" nickname
 - 31 Bad habits
 - 34 "J to ___ L-O!": Lopez remix album
 - 36 Trick ending?
 - 37 Many a server, in the old days
 - 38 Boat rocker, to say the least
 - 39 Lycée attendee
 - 40 It's thrown in
 - 44 "Gotta think about it"
 - 46 Napping
 - 47 Don Quixote's devil
 - 48 Run in, and a hint to the ends of the answers to starred clues
 - 50 "___ out!": ump's call
 - 52 "Back in the Saddle Again" autobiographer
 - 55 Outback
 - 56 Cost-of-living stat
 - 57 Electrical unit
 - 58 Cuts off
 - 60 On the other hand

THIS WEEK IN HISTORY

VALENTINE'S DAY

Approximately 278 A.D., a holy priest in Rome, Valentine, was executed by order of Emperor Claudius II. Valentine was discovered to be marrying couples secretly after an order from the emperor banning marriages and engagements to thicken his army with men who had no worry of not returning from war. Valentine was sentenced to be beaten to death with clubs and also be beheaded on Feb. 14. Legend has it that the priest left a note to the jailer's daughter signed "From your Valentine." After his death, he was named a saint, thus creating St. Valentine's Day.

Sudoku

	4		2			5
		7
8	5			3			2
2			9		5			6
		5				9
9			6		1			8
	6			9			8	5
						1
		1	5		3			9

7 Day Weather Forecast

SATURDAY	SUNDAY	MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY	FRIDAY
HIGH: 49	HIGH: 56	HIGH: 58	HIGH: 60	HIGH: 64	HIGH: 66	HIGH: 61
LOW: 30	LOW: 36	LOW: 35	LOW: 42	LOW: 44	LOW: 42	LOW: 37
SUNNY	SUNNY	SUNNY	SUNNY	CLOUDY	SUNNY	SUNNY

Weather provided by: accuweather.com